This Week's Parashah

The Israelites are commanded to establish a government once they arrive in the Land. The government will include courts with fair and impartial judges. The judges must never accept bribes or favor anyone. An individual accused of establishing foreign worship can be declared guilty only upon the testimony of two or more witnesses. Any case too difficult for a judge to decide is brought before the Levitical priests or magistrates for a ruling. The Israelites may elect to have a king, but the king must be an Israelite; he should not have numerous wives or acquire great wealth; and the teachings of the Torah are to guide him at all times. Moses instructs the people not to become involved in "soothsaying" or sorcery, and warns the people against false prophets. As the portion concludes, Moses discusses the rules by which Israel is to conduct its wars, exempt individuals from wars, and deal with unsolved murders. Deut. 20:19 tells us "lo tashchit et etzah...You must not destroy its trees" when at war against a city. This verse is a major foundation of Judaism's concern for the environment and the concept of "baal taschit," which tells us that we are not to destroy or injure anything useful to people.

Today's Haftarah

Isaiah reminds the Jewish people that they need not fear other peoples. Although the Babylonians have defeated them and they have been sent into exile, God continues to watch over the people and will again show them favor. "Awake, awake! Clothe yourself in robes of splendor, O Holy City of Jerusalem!" says Isaiah. The Children of Israel will be comforted by the Holy One. The exile will end, and God will bring the Jewish people back to Zion, punishing any foe who would dare to pursue them. The destruction of Zion was mourned less than five weeks ago on Tisha B'Av. We felt the loss of Jerusalem keenly. This week, as we approach the High Holiday season, Isaiah's words in this, the fourth of the Haftarot of Consolation leading to Rosh Hashanah, counters the loss with words of great comfort and encouragement.
