This Week's Parashah

God tells Moses to instruct Aaron not to come freely into the Holy of Holies. Only once a year, on the tenth day of the seventh month (Yom Kippur), may he, as the High Priest (Kohen Gadol) enter the shrine behind the curtain. This is the Day of Atonement for all the sins of the Israelites. No work is to be done on this day – a day dedicated to self-denial. The Israelites are commanded not to copy the practices of the Egyptians or the Canaanites; rather, they are to live by God's laws and rules. (This passage is also read on Yom Kippur and is the basis of the Avodah service in Yom Kippur liturgy.) The Torah teaches, "You shall be holy, for I, the Lord your God, am holy." It then details exactly what sincere holiness looks like in every aspect of our lives – in how we treat loved ones and strangers, how we treat the land, and how to think about the words coming out of our mouths. There is a proper way to think about everything ethereal and earthly, everything personal and public. Those who we feel are below us – even animals – should still be treated with the kind of respect we would expect God to treat them. It is a reminder both of God's power, but also of God's love for all creatures.

Today's Haftarah

The concluding verses of the Book of Amos form the Haftarah for Shabbat Kedoshim. Amos lived during the eighth century B.C.E. and his sharp words were directed against the leadership of the Northern Kingdom of Israel. He condemned their irreligious and immoral practices. Amos' major themes were social justice and God's care for all human beings. In this Haftarah, the prophet speaks of impending doom and destruction in store for the Israelites, a consequence of their wanton behavior. But God, in God's love for the people of Israel, also promises through Amos to rebuild the devastated nation and reestablish a time of harmony and peace. This Haftarah provides a forewarning against abandoning the Jewish ideals of social justice and care in our relationships with other people. These themes echo this week's Torah reading with its emphasis on being holy through our actions and interactions with others.

Thought to Ponder:

What is the difference between Matan Torah (giving of Torah) and Kibbel Torah (receiving Torah)?
